

The New York Times

February 9, 2021

A Science Summit to Tackle America's Problems

To the Editor:

As President Biden rallies forces to confront climate change, he looks to science for results. Science provides the means for consensus through facts and evidence-based solutions to overcome the divisive issues facing our country, from the pandemic to climate change, racial inequity and economic disparity.

The logical next step for the Biden administration is to call a Science Summit to attract experts from across the American spectrum. Participants should include scientists who work in government, but also leaders in business and industry, academia and NGOs. Let's bring together experts in mathematics, physics, psychology, economics, education, medicine, public health, engineering and technology.

Their combined knowledge will equip the Biden administration to tackle our country's problems, while uniting Americans behind a common vision for progress.

Okhee Lee
New York

The writer is a professor at New York University's Steinhardt School of Culture, Education and Human Development.